BUSH TAKES VEILED SWIPE AT TRUMP

1 Former President George W. Bush decried "bullying and prejudice" while defending immigrants and trade in a New York speech that appeared to be a sweeping, thinly veiled critique of President Donald Trump. Bush, 71, used a rare public address to discuss nationalism, racial divisions and Russia's intervention in the 2016 election, all flashpoints of his fellow Republican's nine-month White House tenure. He did not mention Trump by name. "Bullying and prejudice in our public life sets a national tone, provides permission for cruelty and bigotry, and compromises the moral education of children. The only way to pass along civic values is to first live up to them," Bush said at the Bush Institute's National Forum on Freedom, Free Markets and Security.

A WAKE UP CALL FOR NY ON GROWING FLOOD RISK

2 As the October 29th anniversary date of Superstorm Sandy approaches, the Regional Plan Association (RPA) has released a report titled "Coastal Adaptation: A Framework for Governance and Funding to Address Climate Change" that warns of the imminent threat of rising sea levels and outlines a strategy to protect the many vulnerable stretches of New York, New Jersey and Connecticut. According to the report, 59 percent of the region's energy capacity, four major airports, 21 percent of public housing units and 12 percent of hospital beds will be in areas at risk of flooding over the next 30 years. RPA research found that even in light of these projections, the region's climate change planning tends to be reactive and local rather than proactive and regional–and it's not nearly enough.

REGULATION OF POLITICAL ADS ON SOCIAL MEDIA

4 Lawmakers, alarmed over hackers' internet use to influence last year's election, introduced legislation to extend the rules that apply to political advertising on television and radio to social media. Democratic Senators Amy Klobuchar and Mark Warner and Republican John McCain introduced the "Honest Ads Act," which would amend existing election law covering television and radio outlets to impose those rules to paid internet and digital advertisements on platforms like Facebook and Twitter. "Our laws have failed to keep up with evolving technology and the capabilities of our foreign adversaries," Klobuchar told a news conference. It would also require digital platforms with at least 50 million monthly views to maintain a public file of all electioneering communications purchased by anyone spending more than $500.

APPLE SHARES FALL ON WEAK IPHONE 8 DEMAND

5 Apple Inc's shares fell nearly 3 percent on Thursday on signs of weak demand for the iPhone 8 that caused analysts and investors to question the company's staggered release strategy for its latest phones. Wireless carriers in the United States and Canada have reported slow third-quarter customer upgrades. While some expect a pickup after the iPhone X goes on sale in November, others cautioned that phone's high price tag could weigh on demand. The chief executive of Rogers Communication, Canada's largest mobile network, on Thursday said appetite for the iPhone 8 and 8 Plus, which went on sale in September, had been "anemic," the latest sign of weak sales for those phones ahead of the Nov. 3 launch of the pricier iPhone X.

Grammy Museum Experience honors Newark's rich musical heritage

The first East Coast outpost of L.A.'s Grammy Museum offers virtual drum lessons with Max Weinberg and celebrates homegrown artists like Whitney, Bruce and Frank.

When most people think about America's great musical cities, Newark likely isn't on the list — but that's about to change now that the Grammy Museum Experience has opened at the Prudential Center.

Just eight months after announcing that the first East Coast outpost of Los Angeles' Grammy Museum would open in Newark, the interactive, multimedia Experience held its ribbon-cutting Thursday and officially opens to the public Friday.

"Newark gets overshadowed by Philly and New York, but it has an incredible musical legacy," said Bob Santelli, founding executive director of the Grammy Museum.

Thursday's festivities kicked off with a rousing performance by the New Hope Baptist Church Choir, which was joined for its last song by Cissy Houston, the Grammy-winning Newark native and mother of Whitney Houston.

The performance was fitting as the younger Houston, who died in 2012, is not only one of the best-selling artists of all-time, she's also featured alongside Frank Sinatra, Bruce Springsteen and many others in an exhibit honoring the Garden State's homegrown musicians.

"There are so many musical greats in this city, you have to wonder what's in the water," joked Margaret El, special assistant for the arts for Newark Public Schools.

John Gomez of Queens speaks at C4Q's Tech Bash on Wednesday. PROVIDED

Queens Dreamer finds his American Dream thanks to tech-focused nonprofit

John Gomez no longer works three jobs and is now an Android engineer.

NIKKI M. MASCALI
@NikkiMMascali
nikki.mascali@metro.us

As thousands of Dreamers question their futures in Trump's America, John Gomez still has hope.

"At the end of the day, all of us are human beings — that's what kept me moving forward," the 28-year-old Queens resident says. "I don't think that the world and society is this dispassionate about other people. I think as long as we keep a positive attitude and positive mental state, we could build a better society than where we come from."

Gomez came to New York from Colombia with his family in 1997 and recently spent several years working three jobs — construction with his father, cleaning with his mother's company and delivering for Postmates — to help them make ends meet.

"I wanted to do something more," Gomez said. "For a long time, I went through depression of not knowing where I belonged. I got good grades in school, but I wasn't really motivated because as an immigrant, what's the point? I couldn't have a career or anything."

That is, until he discovered Coalition for Queens (C4Q), a tech nonprofit that offers an intensive 10-month coding course for low-income or underserved New Yorkers.

"I just jumped on it," said Gomez, who was always interested in science. "I knew if I succeeded in that, I'd not only have a chance for a better life, but to fulfill my own aspirations as a human being."

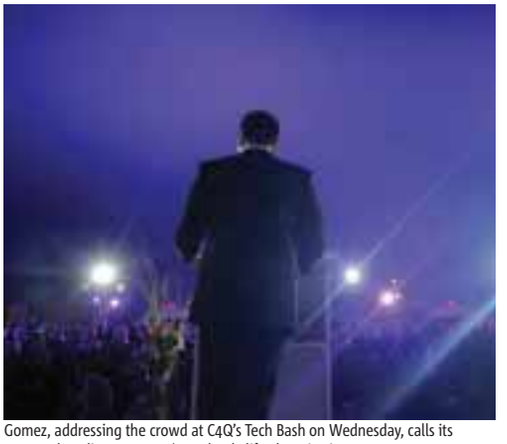
John is living proof that when New Yorkers have the tools they need to succeed, the sky's the limit."
Jukay Hsu

Calling the program "completely life-changing," Gomez now works as an Android engineer at Date Cubed — and was honored for his accomplishments by C4Q at its annual Tech Bash this week.

"After working so hard and so long and training for something better, to see something like this happen, it's hard to come to grasp with it," he said. "I'm really emotional thinking about it and really thankful. It's only the beginning because there's so much I still want to do."

And that's the exact reason Jukay Hsu created C4Q.

"We founded C4Q to create opportunity and access to good paying jobs in the city's exploding tech sector, and John is living proof that when New Yorkers have the tools they need to succeed, the sky's the limit," he says.



Gomez, addressing the crowd at C4Q's Tech Bash on Wednesday, calls its 10-month coding program 'completely life-changing.' PROVIDED

EXTENSIVELY RENOVATED 30 AV AND 36 AV STATIONS IN QUEENS DONE IN A COMPLETELY NEW WAY

BEGINNING OCTOBER 23, 30 AV AND 36 AV STATIONS IN QUEENS WILL UNDERGO AN EXTENSIVE RENOVATION WITH A COMPLETELY NEW APPROACH.

Out with the old

- In the old days the MTA would fix things a little bit at a time, repairing a stairway here, a column there…
- And construction took way too long, with intermittent work on nights and weekends (slow; inefficient; costly).
- Stations never made real progress…

And in with the new

- But now we're doing a temporary complete station closure so work gets done as quickly as possible.
- Contractors get in, get done, get out.
- Extensive Renovation: better, brighter, new art, updated technology, security cameras.

While we're renovating, use nearby (N) (W) stations via Q102, or use TripPlanner+ at mta.info for alternate routes.

How a Yorkie named Andrew helps senior New Yorkers care for their pets

Since 1994, the Carter Burden Network's Andrew Fund has stepped in to provide food, boarding and vet care when seniors need help.

NIKKI M. MASCALI
@NikkiMMascali
nikki.mascali@metro.us

From helping you get exercise to lowering blood pressure and lessening anxiety, the benefits of pet ownership are immeasurable. But owning a pet can be costly and daunting, especially for senior citizens living on a fixed income or suffering from health issues that may result in hospitalizations that take them away from their beloved furry friends.

That's where the Andrew Fund comes in. The fund is part of the Carter Burden Network, a 46-year-old organization created by late City Councilman Carter Burden that now serves more than 5,000 seniors across the city.

The Andrew Fund was founded in 1994 by an anonymous CBN board member in honor of her late beloved Yorkie, Andrew.

"People became concerned because a lot of clients at the time, who were living on low income and Social Security toward the end of the month, if their pet got sick or needed some kind of medical attention, they wouldn't buy food for themselves or forgo getting their own medications in order to pay for a vet bill or buy food for the pet," Mary Dodd, program director of the Andrew Fund, said of its roots.

The Carter Burden Network's Andrew Fund helps New York seniors care for their pets when they cannot. ISTOCK

Dodd estimates that the Andrew Fund — which runs solely on board member donations and its founder's estate — has given between $200,000 to $300,000 to help hundreds of senior New Yorkers with everything from food and boarding to veterinarian care for dogs, cats, birds and turtles.

"I can't tell you how many times we do a first-time interview with people and they say, 'This is the only reason I get up in the morning, to feed my cat or take care of my dog. It's my only reason for being,'" Dodd said. "Very often we have people who have to go into the hospital. What would happen to the pet? We're very fortunate this has helped numerous people over the years."

One of them is Roosevelt Island resident Gloria Salazar, who was able to keep her foster dog, Milo, when the shelter was unable to rehome him due to his behavioral issues.

"He was in bad shape," she said of the rat terrier when she got him. "He was trying to escape, he always had bad stomachaches and many problems."

With the help the Andrew Fund, Salazar was able to tend to Milo's health issues and now, "he's completely different," she said. "He's fat. He still tries to escape, but when I call him, he comes back. I'm so grateful for the help. I love Milo."

The Andrew Fund is available to any client of the Carter Burden Network. To become a client, make a donation or learn more, visit carterburdennetwork.org.

Science says those puppy dog eyes are just for you

You know those people who try to tell you that your pet doesn't really love you or uses you only for food? You know how you want to just tell them "shut up" because you know your fur-kid loves you? Now, you can tell them to "shut up" with science, because a study on dog behavior found that those puppy dog eyes are really just for you.

"We can now be confident that the production of facial expressions made by dogs are dependent on the attention state of their audience and are not just a result of dogs being excited," said study co-author Juliane Kaminski from the University of Portsmouth. She added, "dogs are sensitive to humans' attention and expressions are potentially active attempts to communicate, not simple emotional displays."

Nugget the Morkie seems happy to be in a pumpkin patch with her owner. JULIANNE AERTS

Earlier studies have found that nonhuman animals are capable of producing facial expressions and that most mammals can pull off what looks like a happy or sad face. And yes, those could be facial twitches or your dog panting after a nice jog in the park, but facial expressions have also been reported in macaques, dogs and, as of 2015, horses.

Humans have 27 distinct facial expressions, while chimpanzees can produce 13, horses can produce 17 and dogs can produce 16. Not bad for an animal that licks its own behind.

Other studies on dog behavior suggest dogs are smiling at us and dog behavior allows our canine buds to identify human facial expressions and engage in the same social behaviors as humans, scanning faces and eyes to analyze intent and identify threats.

"Domestic dogs have a unique history — they have lived alongside humans for 30,000 years, and during that time selection pressures seem to have acted on dogs' ability to communicate with us," Kaminski said.

It's possible those puppy-dog eyes are a result of domestication — dog behavior adapted to tap into humans' preference for childlike characteristics. And c'mon, we totally respond to that face, so who trained whom?

White nationalist interrupted at University of Florida speech

On Thursday, several hundred protesters shouting "We don't want your Nazi hate" marched outside the performing arts center where Spencer spoke.

ABOUT 15 WHITE MEN RAISED THEIR HANDS WHEN ASKED WHO IDENTIFIED WITH THE ALT-RIGHT

Protesters shouted "Go home, Nazis" at a white nationalist at the University of Florida on Thursday, disrupting his speech at the campus that erected barricades and deployed hundreds of police officers to guard against violence.

Richard Spencer's event, which prompted the governor to declare a state of emergency to prepare for possible conflict at the university in Gainesville, comes about two months after rallies by neo-Nazis and white supremacists in Charlottesville, Virginia, led to a deadly clash with counter-protesters.

The violence on Aug. 12 added fuel to a national debate on race, and Republican President Donald Trump came under fire for blaming both sides for the melee.

White supremacists have been working to bring Spencer to various public universities, saying he has a constitutional right to free speech. The effort has forced college leaders to allow what they see as hate speech on campus and provide security to prevent violent clashes.

A man hired as security for media was arrested for illegally carrying a firearm on campus, the Alachua County Sheriff's Office said. Another man wearing a T-shirt emblazoned with swastikas emerged from a crowd of protesters with a bloody lip.

"We are stronger than you and you all know it!"

Richard Spencer

"There were a few scuffles, but for the most part it was an extremely peaceful event," said Chris Sims, a spokesman for the sheriff's office.

Inside the venue, Spencer and protesters yelled at one another, and he criticized them for trying to suppress his speech.

"I'm not going home," said Spencer, who heads the National Policy Institute, a nationalist think tank, and who promoted the Charlottesville rally. "We are stronger than you and you all know it!"

He appeared to have few supporters in the crowd. About 15 white men, all dressed in white shirts and khaki pants, raised their hands when Spencer asked who identified with the alt-right, a loose grouping characterized by a rejection of mainstream politics and includes neo-Nazis, white supremacists and anti-Semites.

Spencer left the campus soon after the event ended, university public safety officials said on Twitter. Police worked to separate those who attended the event as they left the venue from protesters gathered nearby.

Scandi scares in 'The Snowman' will send chills down your spine

Rebecca Fergusson brings the cold to this winter thriller.

GREGORY WAKEMAN
@MetroNewYork
gregory.wakeman@metro.us

The story behind the making of "The Snowman" is more interesting than the film itself — it was more than a decade in pre- and pre-pre and pre-pre-pre-production.

The Norwegian tale was released as a book in 2007. Martin Scorsese got his hands on it in 2013. A year later Swedish director Tomas Alfredson slid into the chair. Then Michael Fassbender came to the table. In 2015 Rebecca Fergusson joined the party. And today moviegoers can have the full, big-screen treatment of the ultra-creepy story.

The fictional tale of Norway's first serial killer — who murders adulterous married mothers and leaves a snowman by each body as her/his calling card — is set in Oslo, and the city itself becomes the true standout movie star.

"I know that there were a lot of people interested in this book, and they were going to shoot it in America," says Fergusson. "When Tomas (Alfredson, the director) came in he said, 'We're not shooting it in Ohio. We're not shooting in Chicago. We're going to do it in Oslo. In the real environment. We want to feel the cold. We want to experience the real landscape of what Oslo has to offer.' And that made me so excited."

"Now that I've seen it I couldn't imagine another option," she continues. "This is so real and authentic to the story. It's very Scandi-noir. I'm just happy that it became a very local production.

"The Snowman" certainly looks and feels much different from your typical Hollywood thriller. We doubt there are enough snow machines in Los Angeles to give the chill of the Norwegian scenery, which is truly haunting and overwhelmingly stunning.

So, upon donning big puffy coats and gloves, Fergusson and Alfredson headed to Oslo to meet with the author of the book that inspired their film. "It was a long meeting, where we talked about basically the entire plot and the characters," says Fergusson. "It was very important for Tomas to make me understand that it wasn't a direct replica of the book, so I didn't actually throw myself into reading the book. We needed to create something new and fresh, obviously within the framework of what (author) Jo Nesbø had created (in the book by the same name).

GETTY IMAGES

"We have five (main) characters in this film … but I love when intricate back stories of minor characters play a big part in the major picture," Fergusson tells us. "I find that very thrilling, and with 'The Snowman' everyone's story is very important for the major plot."

The two main characters in charge of the cold (brrrrr) case investigations are Harry, played by Fassbender, and Katrine, played by Fergusson. On working with Fassbender, Fergusson says, "I think he did such a good interpretation of this alcoholic, real, kind of dark, brilliant detective, who in his free time just hits the bottle. Katrine and Harry are quite similar. They're outcasts, and are separated from the environment because they just need to solve cases. It's a beautiful relationship between them that's not sexual, which is something I find great in films."

"The Snowman" is in cinemas from Oct. 20.

"The Snowman"

Rating: R

UNIVERSAL PICTURES

It's quite astonishing, really, how bad "The Snowman" is. The marketing was great! It was made to look like "Gone Girl" meets "Girl with the Dragon Tattoo!" And who doesn't love a serial killer flick this time of year? But, unfortunately, the only thing to look forward to from this "chilling" thriller is the cold you'll feel from the haunting setting of snow-swept Norway. The film tracks decades of cases in which adulterous mothers are murdered and a snowman is left behind by the killer as a calling card, but there's zero tension and no build whatsoever as our alcoholic and deeply troubled sleuths, Fassbender and Ferguson, try to put the pieces of the puzzle together. The plot melts away before it has a chance to build, so save your money and spend it on a Frosty. GREGORY WAKEMAN

"Killing Gunther"

SABAN FILMS

Ugh. "Killing Gunther," a movie about a team of assassins on a mission to kill the world's top hitman, has an A-list comedy cast, some super decent writers and even The Governator as top billing. But you can't help but feel underwhelmed. Despite being just 93-minutes long the movie becomes a chore halfway through your popcorn and before you've even reached for the Junior Mints. It chugs. It stalls. You'll be served physical comedy sketches you've seen (and seen) for years. It truly feels like an SNL sketch that just ... won't ... end. Eventually Schwarzenegger emerges, which injects some enthusiasm to the film, but even he doesn't really give us anything new. Spoiler: There's a "Terminator" joke because, well, meh? At least he's the most bad-ass 70-year-old we know (unless you could recast him with Cher — now there's an action movie we'd rather spend our money on). GW

"Only The Brave"

Director: Joseph Kosinski
Stars: Josh Brolin, Miles Teller
Rating: PG-13

"Only The Brave" is a movie based on a true story that is, unfortunately, playing out once again in Northern California. The film chronicles the Granite Mountain Hotshots — a group of men who come together to save their town from what seems to be an apocryphal wildfire. And it works. It doesn't complicate the real events, play into cheese or melodrama, or beg for tears — but you'll be on the edge of your seat (and maybe grabbing for a tissue) regardless. The entire cast contributes to the cinematic excellence, so we can't single out just one actor for praise. And director Joseph Kosinski is able to go into detail about the seldom-seen world of epic blaze containment, which is inherently perfect for the big screen (don't wait to watch this one on an airplane). The script may not be oh-so-original, but this is some amazing storytelling. GW

Ever since his return to acting in 2011, Arnold Schwarzenegger has focused on having fun with his roles. We see it in "The Last Stand," "Escape Plan," "Sabotage" and "Maggie," as well as his obligatory appearances in the "Terminator" franchise, and his enjoyment has been palpable — this is a guy who will only do what he likes, and audiences appreciate it.

In his latest film, "Killing Gunther," Schwarzenegger plays the title character — the world's best hitman. But he only appears in the last half-hour of the 90ish-minute movie. For the first two-thirds we are treated to a cast of physical comedians who represent a posse bound to kill the famous assassin.

We asked Schwarzenegger how it felt to be talked about incessantly but not appear on screen until nearly the end. "When I read it, what I liked about it is that you are waiting and waiting and waiting, and you're like, 'Who is this Gunther?' and then here I am," he says. "So the question was always, 'Am I not coming in too late in the movie? Should we put it further to the front?' To me it really works. All of a sudden you see Gunther and you can see why he is No. 1 compared to these guys."

GETTY IMAGES

And once we're finally introduced to his character, we're treated to a bit of a serenade. Who knew the former governor of the state of California was also an accomplished vocalist? "I tell you," he shares, "people always ask me, 'Is there anything in a movie that is embarrassing to you?' Like running or walking around naked in "Terminator" 1, 2, 3 … or whatever number it is ... or any action scenes that you are embarrassed about. I will always say singing. I hate singing because I am so bad, and I am so untalented. I have no sense for music. Even though my father played six instruments."

"Gunther is a little bit full of himself, and he thinks he is going to create a big competition for the other singers," he continues. "That's the character. Me Arnold, though, it was painful to do that sh–."

Imagine being embarrassed by belting a few bars when this film also serves up Arnie in lederhosen, a butterfly-encrusted blazer, cravats and … drag.

"Killing Gunther" is in select theaters and On Demand from Oct. 20.

Can Yanks maintain momentum in Houston?

New York took full advantage of playing at Yankee Stadium, taking all three games to move within one win of the World Series.

JOE PANTORNO
@JoePantorno
joseph.pantorno@metro.us

When predicting the outcome of a postseason series, analysts, pundits and fans alike can look at all the stats, matchups and trends they want, but there's one thing that no one can ever foresee: momentum.

So while the ALCS looked as though it would be a fairly easy stroll into the World Series for the Houston Astros, the New York Yankees had the oldest trick up their sleeve to get back in the series and that's home-field advantage.

For the first time since opening its doors in 2009, Yankee Stadium II had the look and feel of the old Yankee Stadium I, which was the Roman Colosseum of sporting venues; a haven for its inhabitants but a nightmare for any who dared enter its walls as unwelcome guests.

The volume was deafening, the fans, ravenous.

It was just what New York needed as it hobbled back home after a pair of demoralizing losses in Games 1 and 2 in Houston.

Back within the friendly confines, the Yankees looked like a completely different team. While the pitching remained stellar, the bats were patient and efficient.

Aaron Judge epitomized this as he broke out of his postseason-long slump with three huge performances at home. After batting .129 in his first eight postseason games, Judge went 4-for-9 in Games 3, 4 and 5 with two doubles, two home runs and 6 RBI.

After scoring just two runs in the first two games of the ALCS, the Yankees seized momentum by putting up 15 runs in the Bronx as they took a 3-games-to-2 series lead and are just one win away from their 41st American League pennant and a trip to the World Series.

Once they took a lead in Game 5 on Wednesday night, the Astros looked despondent at times in the dugout. There was also an overwhelming sense that the Yankees were not going to let their advantage slip away, which Houston did to a 4-0 lead in Game 4.

That's what momentum can do.

The only question that remains is can that momentum follow them to Houston?

New York managed to hit Astros ace Dallas Keuchel for four runs on Wednesday night. In his previous two postseason starts against the Yankees, Keuchel didn't allow a single run to the Yankees while striking out 17.

Game 6 provides another big challenge in Justin Verlander, who twirled a complete Game 2 of the ALCS, giving up one run on just five hits in the process.

If New York can exorcise the Keuchel demons, I'm sure the belief in their locker room is high that they can rough up Verlander and get back to the Fall Classic for the first time since 2009.

2 Things to watch when Giants host Seahawks

1. Mike Sullivan's selections

Head coach Ben McAdoo finally gave up his play-calling duties to offensive coordinator Mike Sullivan in Week 6 and the results were an overwhelming success.

While 23 points aren't exactly lighting up the scoreboard, Sullivan got the run game going for the first time in what felt like two seasons as Orleans Darkwa slashed through the Broncos defense for 117 yards on the ground, a career high for the fourth-year rusher.

It was imperative for the running game to get going after New York's wide receivers were decimated by injuries during their Week 5 loss to the Los Angeles Chargers.

Although normally not a formula for winning, Eli Manning threw the ball just 19 times last week for 128 yards and one touchdown.

Against a Seahawks team known for its pass defense, Sullivan will have to take advantage of their mediocre run stopping. That means making the right calls and getting the ball in Darkwa's hands early and often.

Should the Giants establish their rushing attack early on, Manning and the depleted passing attack should find a few more opportunities to expose Richard Sherman and company.

WEEK 7
4:25 PM KICK-OFF
CBS

2. Is this the O-Line moving forward?

While they still allowed three sacks against the Broncos, the Giants' fifth offensive line combination in six games looked solid, most notably Justin Pugh against Von Miller on the right side.

Here is how the unit stacked up last Sunday:

LT- Ereck Flowers
LG- John Jerry
C- Brett Jones
RG- D.J. Fluker
RT- Justin Pugh

While Manning's safety in the pocket is one thing, Darkwa's success on the ground is another.

If this unit is able to create running lanes like they did against the Broncos, then don't expect this unit to be changed for the rest of the season as long as they stay healthy.

Nets lose Lin for season

The Brooklyn Nets announced Thursday morning that star point guard Jeremy Lin's season is over after suffering a ruptured patella tendon during Wednesday night's season opener against the Indiana Pacers.

Lin suffered the injury during the fourth quarter after driving to the hoop for a layup. After going up to the basket, he came down awkwardly and hit the floor, immediately clutching his knee. The serious nature of the injury was immediately apparent when he yelled out "I'm done," laid on the floor and burst into tears.

He was assisted to the locker room and was sent for evaluations on Thursday morning where the extent of the injury was truly learned.

The 29-year-old is in his second year with the Nets after signing a three-year contract last off-season. His first season with the team was limited due to injuries, too, as hamstring issues forced him out of 46 games.

Nets star guard Jeremy Lin suffered a ruptured patella tendon. GETTY IMAGES

D'Angelo Russell, the young guard they acquired from the Los Angeles Lakers in the Brook Lopez trade, will likely take over starting point guard duties in Lin's absence. Russell's role at the 2 is expected to be filled by some combination of Caris LeVert or Sean Kilpatrick.

The Nets' backcourt was supposed to be the most exciting aspect of their team this season with Russell joining up Lin. But it only looks like more disappointment awaits a franchise that has won just 41 games over the past two seasons.

Aries You are best off keeping secrets and withholding information that could affect your reputation if it got out. Emotional outbursts will not help you resolve an issue.

Taurus Stressful situations will affect your health and relationships with peers. Look for opportunities to collaborate and bring about positive change.

Gemini Documents and deals should be looked over carefully. Don't overreact if something doesn't look right. Get the facts and make adjustments.

Cancer Getting together with friends or peers will do you good. Listen to the ideas and suggestions offered to get a sense of what you want to pursue next.

Leo Emotions will be difficult to control. Look after your finances and protect against situations that could turn out to be costly. Be creative when handling legal or financial affairs.

Virgo Taking a trip or reconnecting with someone from your past will do you good. Attend a reunion or visit old friends or relatives. Catching up will spark memories.

Libra Don't let a last-minute change of plans throw you off-guard. Assess and restructure your plan, and keep moving forward. Your resilience will help you move onward.

Scorpio A change in how you live or handle your personal finances will lead to greater disposable income. An unusual investment will catch your interest.

Sagittarius Look at what's being asked of you before jumping in and taking part. Determine whether what's being offered is doable. Protect against being taken for granted.

Capricorn Step up and take the reins. Your ability to intuitively make the right choice will put you in a good position when it comes to handling your money.

Aquarius Look for alternative ways to conquer a growing problem. Overreacting will not help the situation, but a safe alternative will help you deal with loss.

Pisces You'll have the upper hand if you negotiate on your behalf. An opportunity looks interesting, and with a unique approach you will surpass your expectations. EUGENIA LAST
